

PS 3513

I645

A8

1915

Copy 1

As The Fire Burned

ELLMORE J. GILSTRAP

WIFE, MARY EDNA AND
DAUGHTER ELIZABETH
JOSIPHINE

AS THE FIRE BURNED

A Volume of Poems
by

ELLMORE JACKSON GILSTRAP

Author of
"Renaissance
and
Other Poems"

Published by Versatile Art Press

SPOKANE
Wn.

1 9 1 5

COPYRIGHT 1915:
By Ellmore J. Gilstrap.

DEC 20 1915

© CIA 447326

With affiection for her strong though
gentle influence as wife and mother
This Valentine is sincerely
G. W. Murray

NOTE

It has been suggested to the author that he make a selection from his poems, of those most enjoyed by his friends and publish it in book form; this volume is presented in accordance with the suggestion.

The preface to "Renaissance and Other Poems" is slightly changed and given to this book as several of the poems contained here-in are from that volume.

PREFACE

Alan is a poetic creature; he was created in the image of the Creator of the universe, which harmonizes all the words with infinite grace and majestic rhythm. I believe the man or woman does not live who has not pardoned so far that, at times his or her veins are not flushed with a poetic tingle as the conscience-speaking, "devoid reigndeth, let the people tremble; He saith above the cherubim, let the earth be moved". Therefore, I am presenting this little book to my friends, -- all of whom are poets -- not as a peer among the amateur poets of literature, but simply as a little volume of God's love through the sun-glass of my imagination, and falling, I hope, into some dark corner of sympathy in some isolated little corner of the universe, where the cares of much service, I shall be happy if it pleases my friends who have requested me to publish it, since they have been so dear to me and have brought sunshine into my life.

Prov. 13:9

„A cheerful heart is a good medicine“.

“AS THE FIRE BURNED”

PROLOGUE

“I was musing and the fire burned.”

This said an ancient poet
And lifted his heart to the Infinite
Then feebly in words expressed
The reach of his lofty muse
As it scanned the path of a boundless existence.
Thus every poet,
With infinity centered upon him,
Turns, with the hunger of a conscious limitation
To the fullness of the expanse of Deity,
Above, below, and in every direction,
Then back to the depths of his soul;
For an assurance of befitting destiny.

Upon the hearth the glowing embers crackle
But within the breast
The fire of passionate intelligence burns.

So the great questions of life are ever asked
As the mysteries of Jehovah's heart
Are revealed in conquering blaze;
And the victory which shapes the future of millions
Is won at the hearth-stone.

half a hundred centuries back
Upon God's high-way; turn about and see
Primeval man, in lowly quarters bending,
His repast to prepare.

In his forest, prehistoric;
B cautious still as any wild thing,
The lightening bolted free as now,
Came and went unchallenged,

Nor warded the device of man
His thunders to flash across the heaven
Or load to lift.

His fuel gathered 'midneath those ancient boughs;
Not mould, the simple mind contrives,
So different from the beast,
To bring the Deity within his grasp
And use the mystic power.

Then flatt' fist an' steady stroke,
The spark! again the spark is droped
And now the tinder blazes.

Who dares to say it was not God
Who made that spark successful.
And as the light leaped on and on
Revered the path to civilization's noon-day?

Who dares to say that any path to civilization leads
And passes not thru fire?

Me thinks, before that bon-fire died
That glorious autumn even,
Our fathers gathered round
To feast their hearts and vent imagination:
Who dares to say man would have found
That God made him a poet
Had he not found the vital spark
That bade him be a conqueror--
"Primeval man a conqueror?"—
He even dares to rise from the musings of that fireside
To mount the skies, and place his hand in God's,
Then with that heavenly vision on his heart
Subdue the earth, Make divistating floods
And parched deserts clasp their hands
In graceful union, and send forth a blessing.

The fire in his breast aglow—
The fire on the forge leaps up
To melt the hearts of iron mountains
And stamp divine impressions on them.
Yet in man's breast a devil hides
And grieves at such achievements,
And prompts satanic motives
Where virtue breathes a blessing on intelligence.
So hatred springs from virtue
As man views man's enlightenment
Nor reckons yet with God,
But turns his lofty powers to rain destruction
And shed a brother's blood.

“I was musing and the fire burne<sup>d</sup>”
Two blazing altars stand,
Two brothers musing by them
One is the world’s first faithful son
The world’s first murdered brother
Whose God-accepted sacrifice
Adorns the ancient fire.
Oh! Unhappy Cain,
What murderous vipers issue
From thy unfaithful fire,
To fasten on thy musing heart;—
How soon the action springs.

Candid beauty and cunning treachery
And all the associated passions rise;—
Now the fire sparkles cherrily
Now it dies away, and ugly shadows
Grotesque and lurking,
Encroach upon the smouldering embers.
So the world’s great deeds, both good and bad,
From humble firesides issue;
And the history of the world we read
In the musings at her burning altars.

Stir up the coals till the flame shoots forth
The muse, right heartily to welcome,
Nor president account worthy
Whose arbitrary limits
Obscures the real and vivid.

MUSIC

God verily loveth music;
His creation lauds Him with song;
From the Murmuring trees
That are swayed by the breeze.
To the tide as it rolleth on.

The little birds of the forest,
Which twitter their carols so sweet,
In the wide spreading fields
And the beautiful dells,
Do verily God's song repeat.
And thou; my soul, my inmost self.
Shalt not refuse a song,
When stream and breeze and bird,
In harmony are heard,
And nature sings God's sweetest song.

MAPLE LEAVES

On the moss-covered bank of the river
I listened one summer day.
To the gentle murmuring waters;
As they went on their long, long way.

The zephyrs of summer, waving
The foliage on the banks;
The perfume, sound and symmetry
Spoke mutual returning of thanks.

A maple tree hung o'er the river
Among all the other trees.
With its old moss-covered body
Hidden among its leaves.

Though the autumn was only beginning,
There were signs of early decay,
For among the green hosts, living,
Shone a few golden leaves that day.

The breezes rocked them, whispering;
"It were sweeter to float away
From your living leaf-friends, busy
Adorning the maple all day."

And the gentle urging and coaxing
Was more than the heart could stand;
So a leaf bore down on the breezes
To the bosom of the strand.

And I watched as it tossed and floated
In the cradle so lately found,
Away from the gnarled old maple,
O'er the shimmering waves, beyond,
As I tarried, watching the river,
A flood of thoughts came fast,
And I gazed on the weltering path-way
Until many a leaf had passed.

To see them so gently nestle
In those soft waves, moving on;
Brought thoughts of the tired pilgrim
As he goes to the great beyond
Of the silver waves, I inquired
Where the leaves at last were to be.
On those zephyrs born, came the answer back:
"They will be in Eternity".

God spoke to me on that self-same day
On those very same zephyrs, born,
Came a message sweet, from His very lips,
And it makes my pulse beat warm.

For that message sweet, still compells a thought,
"As the beautiful leaves float on:
Has your influence graced life's maple tree?
Then with joy you shall go beyond.

"And the ebb and the flow and the swelling,
Of the stream to Eternity;
Nor of sorrowing thoughts will be telling
Nor forboding of what shall be.

"But the waves shall speak in harmony
The reward of beautiful life;
And the hearts left behind, the eulogy:
'The balm of thy presence was life'."

JOSIPHINE
TUNE:
"Rose, Rose, Rose."

Who is sweeter, tell me,
Than our Josiphine?
Graceful in her actions;-
Lovely little queen,

CHORUS

Josiphine,
Prettiest flow'r I've seen;
Token of love sent down from Heaven-
How could a sweeter gift be given?
Josiphine.
Sweeter than any dream,
Purer than Springtime's breath
May she e'er remain
Sweet Josiphine.

If we knew her language
Could she, think you, tell
"Of that blessed country
Where the Angels dwell?"

THE EARLY BUTTERCUP

This, the author's first poem, was written

January 25th. 1907

After a thaw in January,
The snow lay on the flats;
Jack Frost, with fun and fury,
Danced o'er the hills' bare backs.

He noticed, as he passed along,
A buttercup in full bloom;
She surely heard a snow-bird's song
And came out all too soon,
"I'll teach her," he thought,
"For she breaks winter's rule;
This night she'll drink a cup
Of experience, extremely cool,"
"Hey there! little buttercup.
Aren't you pretty cold?
'Tis too early you've got up.
What made you be so bold?"

“You should have slept on,
To awake with the spring
And hear the wild birds’song;
As they sweetly sing.”

“Oh yes, it is bleak;
But I don’t mind, the least;
When I can give those who seek
The vernal fragrance,a feast”

“Oh no,” said Jack Frost,
“You are surely mistaken;
And I’ll not be bossed
Until winter’s forsaken.

“And tonight you shall see,
To your dissatisfaction,
Where you will be
With such a notion.”

But Jack’s brother, North Wind,
While eaves-dropping about,
Heard, and thought it a shame
Cruelly to blot her out.

So he set off with a skip
And gathered together
A downy white blanket
As soft as a feather

And e'er night fell on her
She was tucked snugly in,
Away from Jack's torture,
By her friend, North Wind.

Where she slept undisturbed
Till the thaw in the spring,
When again she appeared,
To hear the wild birds sing.

Moral

All months have their sorrows,
All seasons their pain,
But there's always a flower.
E'en in Winter's cold reign.

ROSES

AWAY o'er the eastern mountains,
Is a green little valley of flowers,
Crossed by a limpid river,
Hiding beneath the bowers;
There's where my heart gently leads me
As the twilight softly falls;
There in fancy now I see you
And hear your gentle call.

Ah! well I remember the evening,
Though months and the years have flown,
When I placed a ring on your finger,
And you said your heart was my own.
Ah, darling, don't you remember?
The roses were wet with dew;
You picked me a crimson bud, and asked,
"Will the return of the roses do?"

The roses have come and gone, dear,
And we are far apart;
But time or distance, dear,
Can never change my heart.
And alone in the solemn twilight
I offer this earnest prayer,
"When next I stray amongst roses,
May my own little Rose be there."

MY PRAYER

JESUS, Savior, I would pray thee,
    Bowing here before thy feet,
To look kindly on Thy servant,
    While I solemnly entreat.
Wouldst thou cheer me when I sorrow,
    Let thy light shine on the way.
Be my guard in all temptation,
    Near me would'st Thou always stay.

Jesus, Savior, friend of sinners,
    I would live and die for thee.
Teach me how to win the tender
    To Thy fold; where'er they be.
As I ripen in Thy knowledge,
    If it be Thy blessed will,
I would fight the host of evil,
    Guarded by Thy mercies still.

Jesus, Savior, strong and mighty,
Still for grace I do implore;
Would'st Thou heavenly manna send me,
Till I reach the Golden Shore.
And when angel wings shall bear me
Safely o'er the dashing foam,
May I hear Thy voice, dear Savior,
Welcome me to "Home, Sweet Home".

A MARRIED DUTCHMAN

Unt zince you axed me;
    Vell; I dell
Why I am alwavs
    Looking vell,
    Zince I got married.

Ust almost every
    Blessed night,
I vent me outd,
    Yah!dot ish right,
    Dill I got married.

Unt wagon bills
    Unt orses doo
Do dake mine gals,
    Dey made me blue,
    Dill I got married.

Unt somedimes ust
    To be a shport.
I'd buy fine dings
    Uf every zort.
    Dill I got married.

Unt loost mine shleep
Unt den mine palls
Would sometimes make me
Loost de gals,
Dill I got married.

Gosh! I vorried
Like a zinner;
Dhen I got dhin
Unt got me schlimer
Dill I got married.

Now all dhoose droubles
In a hurry
Left de blace,
Unt, "I should vorry"
Zince I got married

Mine gloths don't sphend me
Quite so now,
As when I didn't
Got mine frow,
Zince I got married.

Because she cuts dem
Half mit dwo, . . . .
Unt makes me vone
As goot as new,
Zince I got married.

Unt now I never
Buy mine gash
For oyster soup
Unt restaurant hash,
Zince I got married.

“Ust dirty zents”
Dwo ice gream zundaes;
Unt den I fond I's
Broke on Mondays --
Dill I got married.

But when I hears de
Woman say:
“Yockeb; Dear,
Its varm to-day”
Zince I got married.

I walks me off
Right straight do down;
You bet mine life
I never vrown,
Zince I got married.

Ice gream gones, I get;
Dey's fine;
I gets de dwo for
Ust vone dime,
Zince I got married,

Mine wife,she zhurely
Is a vender;
She's ust like lightening
I o de dunder,
Zince I got married.

Unt den ders somedings
More you know --
It makes me laugh;-
You didn't know?
Zince I got married

Mine wife;she got dwo
Leddle dwins,
About as big as
Dady's shins,
Zince I got married.

Unt so I'm looking vell,
Dank you;
You do like I unt
You vill doo:
Ust get married.

RENAISSANCE

"Tis even;at my study window
I contemplate the day,
With its failures and successes
Marking out the toilsome way.
And I see my bit of knowledge:
Science,philosophy and myth,
As an atom of debris
Upon the pyramid of truth;
I see my helmet,shield and breast-plate,
For defence in mental strife,
Scarce doth warrant me an entrance
At the tournament of life
My acquired refinement,
Aye,all my polished art,
Are as thorns and nettles
In Nature's throbbing heart.

'Tis even;now fades this
Vernal equinoctal day.
And from out my study window
Aphrodite and Demeter say:

“Come into the class room
Of the beautiful, the true,
And study renaissance
Of classics nearer you”
I betake myself to musing,
And the blood leaps in my veins,
As I think how very vaguely
I have seen God’s divine plan;
I was made in His own image,
With judgement, purpose, and with love,
And I died through my rebellion,
To indument from above.

So I enter God’s great class-room
With lessons unprepared,
Bet a hungry heart that’s grateful
For His treasures, with me shared;
A tongue quite dumb with praises
Which mere words could never tell
And a brain that’s not been measured
By an arbitrary scale.
For He teaches: not as do
His humble students, men;
The achievements and the progress
On the towpath of mankind.
Ah, truly they fail
To teach the whole man,

For they surely are failures
Who man's mission would find
Each propelling life's argo,
These frail Argonauts,
By things through sensation
Made analytic thoughts,
To hear, to taste, to smell, to feel,
To use the miracle of vision,
Doth solemn thought and praise compel,
Yet God gives intuition.

So the teachers I hear
In this free-thinking class,
Are the springtime freshets
And zephyrs that pass;
Yet my soul is outpoured
In hearty response
To the words, as they
Echoing, say "renaissance;"
And I try to express
In my homely way.
My soul's sweet content
At the close of this day;
But though the five senses
May serve you well,
A sixth you must have
If to you I tell

The beauty of holiness;
Potentiality of faith
In the gift to creation
Of universal life.

As the white, fleecy clouds,
Fringed with purple and gold,
Like a virgin's white bosom,
Half concealed in the fold,
Are swelling to curves
Of beauty and grace,
Covering the heart
Of this grand Renaissance.
I pray the mighty
Benefactor of man:
"May the renaissance of thy Spirit
In my heart have free reign."

THE BANQUET

Autumn in splendid livery,
Graceful as ripened love, is here,
Nor comes with empty hands.
Her harvest basket, life to sustain,
Is emptied at our feet;
But no good queen is satisfied
To feed the physical,
And starve the truer man, the soul;
So good queen Autumn spreads a feast
For eyes and ears and heart,
Then gently lifts the gauzy fringe
Of summer's wasting curtain
That we may peep within;
Our eyes and ears and sense of smell
And taste and intuition,
At once are asked to enter,-
The banquet now is served,
And course on course brings new surprise
And strange enchantment fills the heart.

The forest is the banquet hall,
Nor richer walls have any;
Each humble leaf in gorgeous beauty
Contributes to the whole,
Nor waits complaining for a place
Of more exalted station.
Each thrilling song, harmonious,
Is blended with a thousand,
Nor discord makes
Nor asks a special notice.
Each whispering zephyr,
Pregnant with a varied fragrance,
Is wafted in the wake of many kindred breezes,
Nor claims a freer path
Down through the trembling foliage.
Thus all, combining, speak of God
And infinite agreement;
A benediction, not in words
But loving sacrifice.

CONTRAST

By Frederic Wilson

The flags of empires mark the fields
Of conquest gore and anguish,
And flaunt their all-assuming pride
Where millions, wounded languish
Thank God! "Old Glory" mounts the breeze
To send a positive message
Across the waters, born of God,
Yet to spare His heritage.
As o'er a hundred battle fields
Insane with awful carnage,
The ensigns of delirious pride
Are torn with devilish rage
"Old Glory" proudly flings her out
Above ten thousand school-grounds
To tell the honor of the race
Where yet christian peace abounds.

MEDITATIONS

I lay awake on my pillow last night,
For sleep had fled afar;
And watched through the open window
The twinkling evening star;
The past reappeared before me,
And the present vanished, quite;
And Father Time in his flight turned back
To my childhood days, last night,
I seemed to be in the garden,
With my brother, just younger than I,
Hoeing and talking and laughing,
As we did in the days gone by;
Watching the bees select their flowers,
And wondering the reason why,-
Listening to the chirp of the cricket,
Or catching a butterfly.

As happy the times we spent together
In woodland and field and meadow;
How sweet were our thoughts in those happy days
When shaded out his shadow;
When we sympathized in each other's grief,
And felt each other's fear;
But my heart quickly throbbed when I thought:
"He's been under the sod a year."
What a cruel life this is to live,
After one learns to know;
But sorrows bind love cords closer,
As heavenward still we go;
For surely 'tis sweet to think
Our dear ones have reached their goal,
"Where the tender Shepherd doth guard with care,
The lambs of the upper fold."

EPILOGUE

The baby, frolicking on the floor
Has dropped her head on her arm
And is singing her sleepy song once more,
With a natural and innocent charm,
Her playthings are pushed back out of sight
And her mamma is humming the while,
As she brings her to kiss her papa "good-night"
And be hugged and petted a while;
Good-night! good-night! good-night!

The baby is sleeping; fire's out,
The fire of our pleasant muse;
The dipper has circled the north star about
To pour out the mid-night dews;
'Tis a pleasant time we've had 'tis right,
Very lovely and pleasant, my dear;
But the time has come to say "good-night"
So with all it can mean, my dear.
Good-night! good-night! good-night!

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 015 897 237 2

